Who Is Liable in a Semi-Truck Crash?

A crash involving a tractor-trailer often has more than one responsible party. The driver, the trucking company, the owner of the trailer, the company that loaded the cargo and the manufacturer of a defective part can each play a role. Identifying every responsible party is an early job for a truck accident lawyer, because each responsible party may have separate insurance.

The driver's conduct

The starting point is usually the driver's conduct, such as speeding, following too closely, unsafe lane changes, distraction, impairment or fatigue. Commercial drivers must hold a commercial driver's license (CDL) under 49 CFR Part 383 and follow the driving rules in 49 CFR Part 392, which include truck accident lawyers limits on texting and hand-held phone use. A safety violation does not prove fault by itself, but in many states it can serve as evidence of negligence, and some states treat it as negligence per se. A truck wreck lawyer compares the driver's conduct against these rules.

Liability of the trucking company

If the driver is an employee working within the scope of the job, the trucking company is generally answerable for the driver's negligence under vicarious liability, sometimes called respondeat superior. The company may also face direct claims based on its own conduct, such as negligent hiring, negligent retention, negligent supervision and negligent entrustment. The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations require a driver qualification file under 49 CFR Part 391, drug and alcohol testing under 49 CFR Part 382, and systematic inspection, repair and maintenance under 49 CFR Part 396. Gaps in those records can support a direct claim against the company, and for a truck accident lawyer the driver qualification file is often one of the first documents requested.

Owner-operators and leased trucks

Some drivers are owner-operators who lease their trucks to a trucking company. The leasing rules in 49 CFR Part 376 require https://truckaccidentlawyers.wiki/directory/national-coverage/ the lease to give the trucking company exclusive possession, control and use of the equipment for the lease term, which can matter if the company says the driver was an independent contractor. The USDOT number and name marked on the cab, the bill of lading and the lease itself help show which company was operating the truck. A truck crash attorney typically requests these documents early.

Shippers and freight brokers

Shifting or falling cargo can contribute to rollovers and jackknife crashes. The cargo securement rules in 49 CFR Part 393 set standards for tiedowns and load securement, and a shipper or loading company that controlled how the freight was loaded may share responsibility in some cases. Claims against a freight broker that arranged the shipment raise separate questions, including federal preemption, and the answer turns on the specific claim and facts.

Manufacturers and repair shops

When brakes, tires, steering components or an underride guard fail because of a defect, the manufacturer can face a product liability claim. An outside repair shop that did faulty work may also be named. Separating a defect from poor maintenance usually means inspecting the parts before they are repaired or scrapped.

Insurance and shared fault

Under 49 CFR Part 387, for-hire interstate trucks with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more that haul nonhazardous property must carry at least $750,000 in public liability coverage, and certain hazardous materials require higher minimums. Most states apply comparative negligence, which may reduce damages by the injured person's percentage of fault, while a few still follow contributory negligence. A commercial truck accident attorney looks at all of the parties, since a single policy may not cover the full loss.
