

Federal Inmate Text App: How It Works Before Sending Your First Message

What a Federal Inmate Text App Does

A federal inmate text app lets friends send text messages to a person in federal custody through a platform that the Bureau of Prisons approves. Unlike ordinary texting, these services run on screened systems, so messages are reviewed under facility policy. Access depends on the individual's housing unit, and per-message charges are typically paid in advance.

Finding a Trustworthy Service

Start by checking the facility's list of authorized providers and the BOP inmate locator at bop.gov to confirm the person's location. Steer clear of websites that promise secret access or ask for an inmate's login credentials, since these are common scam tactics. Review pricing, refund terms, and data privacy before you enter payment details, and use a strong, unique password for your account.

Using the App Within Facility Rules

Keep messages respectful and brief, and avoid discussing active legal cases, because reviewed communications can be referenced during reviews. Confirm which contacts are approved and learn the rules for attachments before sending them. For the most current guidance, contact the facility's case management office and review current policies before you commit to a paid plan.
