Upon opening, the container arbitrarily generates a digital item that is contributed to the user's inventory.

While the idea originated as a cosmetic-only feature in Valve's Team Fortress 2 and Counter-Strike: Global Offensive, it has given that spread across many gaming genres and independent third-party sites.

The Mechanics: How Odds and RNG Work

Platform developers normally program particular drop rates (possibilities) for different tiers of items. While precise portions vary depending on the platform, a standard rarity hierarchy usually applies.

Common Item Rarity Tiers

Tier	Rarity Level	Approximate Drop Rate	Description
Tier 1	Common/ Consumer	~ 79.9%	Basic items with standard designs and low market value.
Tier 2	Uncommon/ Industrial	~ 15.9%	Slightly more detailed products, still really common.
Tier 3	Rare/ Mil-Spec	~ 3.2%	Noticeable visual upgrades; basic staples of the majority of inventories.
Tier 4	Categorized/ Restricted	~ 0.64%	Highly stylized products with unique visual styles.
Tier 5	Covert/ Classified	~ 0.13%	Premium items; highly looked for after by collectors.
Tier 6	Unique/ Exceedingly Rare	~ 0.26%	(Total for top tier) Ultra-rare products, such as knives, gloves, or secret drops.

Note: Percentages are approximations based upon openly readily available market data and community testing; specific video games might differ.

The Economics of Digital Items

Case opening does not exist in a vacuum; it is greatly connected to supply and demand economics. When a product is unboxed, its fate is usually chosen by the user.

What Happens to Unboxed Items?

1. Gearing up: The user keeps the item to show in-game.
2. Trading: The product is traded straight with other users via peer-to-peer networks.
3. Market Listing: The product is sold on official markets or third-party platforms for real or platform currency.

Due to the fact that ultra-rare products have a tiny drop rate, their market value can increase. In some extreme cases, digital skins have cost 10s of thousands of dollars, turning casual case opening into a high-stakes financial playground.
