Types of Wage Loss Benefits

1. Temporary Total Disability (TTD) Benefits

- If you're completely unable to work for a certain period due to your injuries, TTD benefits come into play.

1. Temporary Partial Disability (TPD) Benefits

- If you're partially able to work but earning less than before your injury, TPD compensates for that lost income.

1. Permanent Total Disability (PTD) Benefits

- If you've sustained permanent injuries that prevent you from returning to any form of employment, PTD benefits will provide long-term financial support.

1. Permanent Partial Disability (PPD) Benefits

- For those who can return to work but with limitations or decreased earning capacity, PPD benefits offer support based on the severity of the disability.

How Are Wage Loss Benefits Calculated?

Calculating Average Weekly Wage

Your average weekly wage plays a central role in determining how much you'll receive in wage loss benefits:

- Most states calculate this based on earnings over a set period leading up to your injury.

State-Specific Regulations

Each state has its own regulations regarding how wage loss benefits are calculated:

- Some states cap weekly payments at a certain amount.
- Others may have formulas based on percentage losses tied closely to prior salaries.

Example Calculation Table

State	Average Weekly Wage	Maximum Payment	Formula Used	----- ----- -----
-----	CA	$1,000 $1,300	66% of AWW	TX
		$800 $975	70% of AWW

Note: Always check local laws or consult with a workers' compensation lawyer for specifics tailored to your situation.

Duration of Wage Loss Benefits

How Long Will You Receive Payments?

The duration varies widely based on several factors:

- Type of benefit being claimed
- Severity and nature of the injury

Temporary benefits typically last until recovery or until maximum medical improvement (MMI), whereas permanent disability could mean ongoing payments indefinitely depending on severity levels defined by medical professionals.

Tax Implications on Workers' Comp Payments

It's essential to note that most states do not tax workers' compensation payments; they're generally exempt from federal income tax as well! However:
