Most companies consider the job done once the crew leaves. The Happy Housekeepers treats the first visit as the start of a conversation. After every initial cleaning, someone from the office calls to ask how it went. It is a simple habit, but it has been part of this Roanoke cleaning service since founder Mary Jane Wszolek started the business in 1979.

The follow-up call exists because no two homes are the same, and no first visit is ever perfect for everyone. Maybe you want the guest room skipped and the mudroom given more attention. Maybe you noticed a spot under the kitchen table that was missed, or you would like a particular product used on your hardwood floors. The call gives you a chance to say so, and the office records your preferences for future visits.

That personalized attention is described on the company's about page, which notes that service begins with the first phone call and continues with a follow-up after the initial cleaning. Customer reviews on the company website echo it, with many mentioning managers who checked in personally and staff who adapted to special requests. It is a level of care that is hard to find with larger franchise operations.

The call also ties into the company's long-standing promise of satisfaction guaranteed. If something was not done to your standard, the office will make it right. That commitment has helped the company hold BBB accreditation since 1993 and an A+ rating, and it has kept many Roanoke clients with the same company for years.

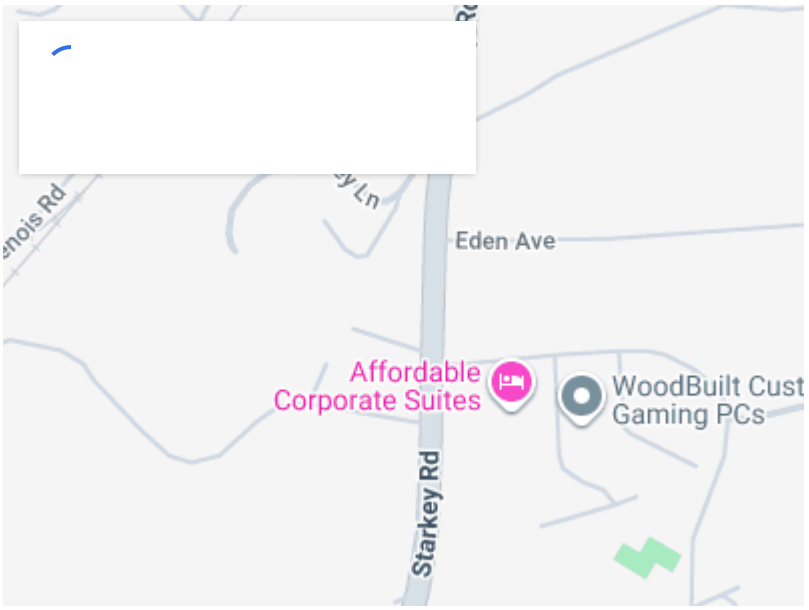

Commercial clients receive similar support through Corporate Clean, where a supervisor is always on call. Office managers can raise concerns, request changes or ask for extra attention ahead of an important event, and the response comes from someone who knows the account.

Everything else about the service is built for convenience. The company supplies local cleaning company Roanoke products and equipment, employees are bonded and insured, and plans can be one-time, weekly, bi-weekly or monthly. Estimates are free with no obligation, and payment is accepted by Visa, Mastercard, American Express and Discover.

The follow-up call is often where a first visit turns into a lasting relationship. It shows that someone cares enough to ask, and it turns a one-time transaction into an ongoing relationship. Over time, those small adjustments add up to a routine that fits your home perfectly, and a crew that knows exactly how you like things done without needing to be reminded on every visit.
